Before that time educators had long felt the need of this form of outdoor life for growing boys, and boys camps had been in existence for nearly a decade. But as for girls and the out-of-doors, the popular idea had not advanced beyond the summer hotel stage. The suggestion came originally from some parents who had had sons in a camp in Maine conducted by Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Cobb of Providence, Rhode Island, and who felt that girls ought to have the same freedom in their sports as their brothers enjoyed, and that in order to gain this it would be necessary to get away from the beaten path, to live in the open and to adopt some simple form of dress.
