Excerpt: . . . concentrations of dissolved oxygen in the stream and in Appendix B. The Washington State Department of recorded concentrations. In this study, corrections Ecology Manchester Environmental Laboratory applied to the dissolved-oxygen monitoring data, and ( Manchester Laboratory ) in Port Orchard, Wash. , the subsequent rating of those data, were determined by analyzed all samples. Information about laboratory differences between recorded concentrations and performance and quality can be obtained online concentrations determined by Winkler. If, for example, ( Washington State Department of Ecology, 2001c ). there was a constant difference between the Winkler Bed-sediment samples were collected on August titration data and the monitoring data, a uniform 22 by the USGS and the Puyallup Tribe at six locations correction equal to that difference was applied to the extending from RM 5. 8 in the Puyallup River to about monitoring data. Although the ratings ( fig. 4 ) are based RM 1 in the White River. The Manchester Laboratory largely on the amount of correction applied to the data, analyzed these samples for total iron and manganese additional consideration was given to factors such as concentrations. During bed-sediment sampling, cross instrument noise. Even though the corrected record is sections were probed with a rod to make a rough considered to be more representative of concentrations determination of the composition of the riverbed. in the stream, the rating for that record was Except for near-bank...
