SOME OBSERVATIONS ON THE TREATMENT OF DISEASES OF THE UPPER AIR PASSAGES. The great desideratum in the treatment of affections of the upper air passages, particularly in those of a chronic nature, is persistent and systematic medication. The inability or unwillingness of patients to make frequent visits to the physician, and the impossibility in many cases, of successful self-treatment by atomization or other local applications, long since led to the employment of various drugs, made into the familiar forms of troches, pastilles, bougies, etc., by their incorporation with sugar, gum acacia, and gelatin. Of these, gelatin, on account of its smooth non-irritating character and comparative slow solubility, seems to be preferable. The remedies used differ in nowise from those employed in diseases of other mucous membranes, the only but very decided advantage being that the pathological...
