[...]which at a distance resembled a tufted, bronze-green carpet, musingly asked: What do you suppose planted those trees there? The girl was deeply impressed by the novelty of this query. I never thought to ask. I reckon they just grew. No, there's a reason for all these plantings, he insisted. We don't worry ourselves much about such things out here, she replied, with charming humor. We don't even worry about the weather. We just take things as they come. They walked on talking with new intimacy. Where is your home? he[.].
